and the Hurley Mountain Road, west of Esopus Creek. The single exception is the Hardenbergh House, birthplace of the Negro evangelist Sojourner Truth. This residence is a short distance south of Hurley Street, on Schoonmaker Lane at the Millbrook, as shown. The house, dating from 1750, is easily accessible from Hurley Street and should be recognized in designating the historic district. The dates shown on the map should be used with caution, as study of the houses is still going on in an effort to authenticate their dates of construction. However, the dates probably are within a few years of actual construction. In the case of the historic district, the exact dates, while desirable, are not essential to recognition of the town's significance in preserving the Dutch heritage. The old cemetery north of Hurley Street is the resting place of many of Hurley's earliest settlers, as revealed by the Dutch names on the worn grave stones.

Not only Hurley's houses, but the fertile flood lands of Esopus Creek, west of the town, recreate the story of the early settlers, showing why they chose this spot for their "New Village."
